

Maple Lawn Cemetery (A-F)

<http://www.dixiestones.net/details.php?listing=581>

350 W Jackson Blvd
Jonesborough Tennessee 37659

Maple Lawn Cemetery is located at 350 W Jackson Boulevard in Jonesborough, Washington County, TN. Jackson Boulevard is also known as U. S. Highway 11E or the Jonesborough Bypass. Although the sign at the cemetery indicates that the cemetery was established in 1882, Ellen Keebler appears to be the first burial there in 1880. There may have been earlier burials and there may have been some memorials lost over the years.

This cemetery is of particular interest to me because my parents, paternal grand-parents and a sister are buried here. Numerous other relatives on my fathers side of the family are also interred here as well as many childhood friends and classmates. The cemetery is unfenced and well maintained. It is located adjacent to the County Sheriff's Office and Jail which combined with the presence of the Police Department, discourages vandalism.

Information within "quotation marks" has been taken from the memorial itself. Information within (parentheses) has been provided by the transcriber. While due diligence has been used in preparing this information and this document, some mistakes may occur. I have decided to not place the date of birth in this transcription of persons who are still living because of the danger of identity theft. I will update this information periodically. If your information conflicts with mine please notify me and I will attempt to reconcile the matter. My hope is to provide an accurate transcription that can be relied upon by historians and genealogists. The following abbreviations are utilized in preparing this document:

s/o (son of), d/o (daughter of), w/o (wife of)

The Jonesborough Veterans Memorial was recently established to honor Washington County military veterans by allowing citizens to place a granite block into the walkway of a Memorial which would provide the name of the individual and the unit in which they served. A decision was made to exclude Confederate Veterans. As one can imagine, it caused no minor stir among the descendants of our honored Confederate dead, myself being one of those descendants. Ironically, this cemetery and those buried in it exhibit the tolerance that President Andrew Johnson hoped for at the end of that conflict. Of primary import in this regard is Amanda Jane Hall. She was widowed in the Civil War when her husband Captain Mark Montgomery Pritchett died while serving in the Confederate 60th Tennessee Mounted Infantry. She would later marry Albert F. Brown. Brown served as a Private in the Union's 6th Tennessee Infantry. William T. Pritchett, son of Mark Montgomery Pritchett, served in the 8th Tennessee Cavalry, also a Union regiment. The State of Tennessee was the most conflicted of the states when it came to the Civil War but not quite as conflicted as the Memorial Committee in Jonesborough. A recent change at the Memorial allows the placement of blocks honoring Civil War veterans of the North and South. No unit designation is allowed on the block to indicate which side they served on.

While there are some enlistment records available for the U. S. Army and the U. S. Army Air Corps, no such records are available for the Navy, Marines, Coast Guard and the Merchant Marines. As a result, some buried in this cemetery could have served in these military organizations but unless that service is indicated on the Memorial Stone itself, we have no information concerning their service. Some muster information from Naval Ships is available but this information often does not contain enough personal identifiers to absolutely identify the person involved. Military service information may also be gleaned from obituaries. WWII service dates may also come into question depending on the date of birth of the individual involved. Some mistakenly believe that WWII ended in 1945 with the surrender of Japanese forces in Tokyo Bay, however, hostilities were declared at an end in Europe by President Harry Truman on Dec 13, 1946.

As far as Civil War service is concerned, the online data base of the Civil War Soldiers and Sailors System, National Park Service, has a pretty good track record on accuracy of enlistment information. The State of North Carolina has the best individual records of those who served in North Carolina units during the Civil War. These 17 volumes can be found in the local history section of most libraries.

In summation, be aware that there are a number of names which may indicate the same family line but spell their surname slightly different. Some examples are Arrowood, Arwood, Barnett, Barnette, Carder, Carter, Clark, Clarke, Daniel, Daniels, Dickson, Dickeson, Dickison, Fleman, Fleeman, Gresham, Grisham, Harshbarger, Hashbarger, Keeble, Keebler, Mathes, Mathis, Neas, Nease, Percell, Persell, Purcell, Salts, Saltz, Schucraft, Shucraft, Stewart, Stuart, Silver, Silvers, Spitser, Spitzer.

This cemetery transcription was completed on Veteran's Day, 2009. It is a true and accurate transcription of all readable stones in the cemetery. It will be updated periodically to reflect any new information.
